Come to the 5th annual IPAC Toronto Region new professional development and networking event. N-gen, a performance consulting company, will offer an interactive session helping new professionals navigate their careers in the public service. Being able to communicate and influence managers and colleagues is an important career skill. Traditionalists, Baby Boomers, Gen X and Gen Y – have four different perspectives on work. It is important to recognize the different motivations, values, and behaviours to communicate within a multigenerational team. At the end of this session, participants will be able to:

- Describe the four generational identities
- Explain how identities translate into behaviours in the workplace
- Apply career management tips for career success in the public sector
