

The Promising New Professionals award is provided to individuals who have spent less than five years in public service although they may have had careers in other sectors.

These awards are presented to new public servants who demonstrate:

- leadership potential with the public service;
- the ideals and values of public administration and
- the ability and potential to continue and constantly improve on the work of public administration.

New Professional award winner Kenelm Grismer works with the Saskatchewan Research Council in Saskatoon as an Intellectual Property/Technology Specialist. Kenelm has a Bachelor of Commerce (majoring in Finance) from the University of Saskatchewan. He was nominated by a colleague for the leadership role he has assumed in his workplace and specifically for his ability to find and apply innovative solutions, his ability to work with colleagues at all levels and his clear commitment to providing the highest level of customer service.
